offering for sale impure fish. His case came up for trial in police court yesterday and Attorney A. R. Barnes for the defense objected to the introduction of any evidence, on the ground that the complaint was improperly drawn, in that it did not allege criminal intent.

The contention was that the statute providing that any action for violation of the pure food laws must show that the person selling the impure or adulterated food has knowledge of the unwhole-someness of the articles which he sells. The city ordinance, however, does not provide that the merchant must know the quality of the article, but merely states impure fish or meat must not be sold or offered for sale.

Mr. Barnes argued that the ordinance for the New Year is a Bank Book offering for sale impure fish. His case

Mr. Barnes argued that the ordinance could not be broader in its scope than the statute after which it was drawn. Judge Diehl took the case under advisement, and it will be argued at length later on by P. J. Daly for the city and Mr. Barnes for the defense. رائع دو د

This tirade fell on deaf ears as the gentlemen present had lost various sums of money and were interested in knowing where it had gone. One of the interesting facts developed was that some of the assessment work had been paid for in stock of the company. Another feature was that the president claimed that in the first place he owned 210,000 of the 300,000 shares of stock; much of this he had sold to keep the company going and to pay for the yearly renewal of the leases and considerable of the remainder he had dis-tributed among relatives. The state fair men want the legislature to grant an appropriation of $25,000 for each biennial fair, instead of the $7,000 or $8,000 granted for the annual fairs. This, it is argued, will permit of a great exhibition being neld in Salt Lake every two years. It is proposed to make it an intermountain fair with entries unrestrict-

It is expected the officials of the association will start at once to draft a bill containing the provisions desired and this will be introduced into the legislature as early as possible in the coming session.
